Sorry I haven't been up to speed lately with the articles, still having a tough time of it emotionally. Makes it hard to think...

Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak is meeting with Colonel Muammar Gaddafi of Libya tomorrow to discuss a range of issues affecting the region. On the agenda will be the escalating crisis in neighbouring Sudan, along with Iraq, Lebanon, the issue of the new Palestinian unity government and increased ties between the two countries. Libya, at least to me, seems an unlikely country to become embroiled in the peace process in the Middle East. But Gaddafi is a strong supporter of the Hamas terror government, and has officially pledged his support for the organization, along with all the other nations in Gog's alliance (Russia, Turkey, Iran and Sudan). Libya is mentioned by name as one of the nations that fight against Israel in the war of Ezekiel 38-39. Clearly the "Palestinian cause" still weighs heavily on Gaddafi's mind.
